POETRY.

SEASONABLE SONNET.

Is a fresh deluge feared? is a comet, in mirth,
To eft from its orbit our fenceable earth?
Or, what thing has happened, or what can occur,
To account for this dread, or warrant this stir?

The decrepit and sprightly—the grave and the gay,
Are moaning and groaning in the very same way;
But one cry is heard from the portly or lank,
Removal—Re-charter—United States Bank!

The mercury, through fear, falls quite down to zero;
And the earth freezes hard, as the heart of old Nero;
All pockets are empty, and bare is each closet,
How could Mr. Taney remove the Deposit?

If from trifles, misfortunes tremendous may grow,
In justice, our pleasures from trifles should flow:—
'Tis logical then; or at least we'll suppose it,
That joy must return, when they change the Deposits!

Then hope's flattering "drafts" shall be "taken at sight,"

And a "general curtailment" each sorrow will blight;
Bad luck will no longer cause one to look blank,
When Congress re-charters the United States' Bank.

Though, perhaps, 'twould be cruel so soon to redeem
Our eight dollar-day men from so harmless a theme;

Or break, on a sudden, the spokes of a mill

Which our paragraph grinders can use with such skill.

MALGRE.

A KENTUCKIAN'S ACCOUNT OF A PANTHER-FIGHT.

By James H. Hackett.

I never was down-hearted but once in my life, and that was on seeing the death of a faithful friend, who lost his life in trying to save mine. The fact is, I was one day making tracks homeward, after a long tramp through one of our forests—my rifle carelessly resting on my shoulder—when my favorite dog, Sport, who was trotting quietly ahead of me, suddenly stopped stock still, gazed into a big oak tree, bristled up his back, and fetched a loud growl. I looked up and saw, upon a quivering limb, a half-grown panther, crouched down close, and in the very act of springing upon him. With a motion quicker than chain-lightning I levelled my rifle, blazed away, and shot him clean through and through the heart. The varmint, with teeth all set and claws spread, pitched sprawling head foremost to the ground, as dead as Julius Caesar! That was all fair enough; but mark! afore I had hardly dropped my rifle, I found myself thrown down flat on my profile by the old she-pantther, who that minute sprung from an opposite tree and lit upon my shoulders, heavier than all creation! I feel the print of her devilish teeth and nails there now! My dog grew mighty loving—he jumped a-top and seized her by the neck; so we all rolled and clawed, and a pretty considerable tight scratch we had of it. I began to think my right arm was about chucked up; when the varmint, finding the dog's teeth rather hurt her feelings, let me go altogether, and clenched him. Seeing at once that the dog was undermost, and there was no two ways about a chance of a choke-off or let-up about her, I just out jack-knife, and with one slash, perhaps I didn't cut the panther's throat deep enough for her to breath the rest of her life without nostrils! I did feel mighty savagous, and big as she was, I laid hold of her hide by the back with an alligator-grip, and slung her against the nearest tree hard enough to make every bone in her flash fire. "There," says I, "you infernal varmint, root and branch, you are what I call used up!"

But I turned around to look for my dog, and—tears gushed smack into my eyes, as I see the poor affectionate creature—still of a gore of blood—half raised on his fore legs, and trying to drag his mangled body towards me; down he dropped—I run up to him, whistled aloud, and gave him a friendly shake of the paws—(for I loved my dog!)—but he was too far gone; he just had strength enough to wag his tail feebly—fixed his closing eyes upon me wiffully—then gave a gasp or two, and—all was over!

Effects of Sorrow.—Life has long years—many pleasures it has to give in return for many which are taken away—and while our ears can receive the sounds of revelry, and our eyes are sensible of pleasant sights, and our bodies are conscious of strength, we deem we live; but there is an hour in the lives of all when the heart dies; an hour unheeded, but after which we have no real life, whether it perish in the agony of some conquering passion, or die weary of sorrow—an hour which they may strive to trace, who say—

"ay, I remember I thought and felt differently then—I was a mere boy—I shall never feel the same again;"—an hour when the cord is snapped and the chain broken on which depended the harmony of existence.

Shout, little children! shout and clap your hands with sudden joy! send out the sound of ringing laughter over the face of the green-bosomed earth! From you the angel nature hath not yet departed—in your hearts linger still the emanations from the Creator: perfect love and perfect joy. Shout, I say, and rejoice! for the dark days are coming upon ye, when ye shall see no light, and the hours when mirth shall be strange to you, and the time when your voices shall grow so sad that they shall mingle with the wailing of the winds, and not be distinguishable from them, because of the exceeding sorrow of their tones!

Conjugal Love.—Affection may be won by the sweetness of disposition, and esteem and respect by talents and by virtue; but no other quality can confer the nameless interest which arises from a happy congruity of tastes and of pursuits. To feel with one heart, to judge with one mind, and to look to the same high and pure sources for happiness, are the most beautiful links in the golden chain of domestic union.

THE MORNING POST.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1834.

STENOGRAPHIC GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS.

No. LVII.

Washington, Feb. 5, 1834.—Mr. Webster, Chairman of the Committee of Finance, made his long-promised Report this morning. The promise may be said to be long fulfilled, for it was lengthy and elaborate, occupying a great portion of the morning in the reading of it, and the rest in incidental debate about its acceptance, and the number of copies to be printed, &c.

There was considerable Turkish pastime in the jeer-seed that took place between Messrs. Forsyth, Webster, Wright, Tyler, Clay, Wilkins, Mangum, Brown, &c. Dr. Chambers commenced something narcotic; but it did not prevent a crisis.

Judge Wilkins was to have had the floor to day on the old subject; but the report rather changed the ground of debate, by taking Mr. Clay's resolutions into consideration yesterday afternoon, and recommending them for adoption this morning; so that the Senator from Pennsylvania—though one of the finance committee, and supposed to know their reasons on the subject—did not feel prepared to go on under the new aspect of affairs.

Mr. Forsyth, who is always ready for a tilt, said that it was rather extraordinary, that, the subject being committed only yesterday at 4 o'clock, the committee should have been able to make so long and elaborate a report; and the Senator from Penn. he thought should not be required to proceed in his argument, till he had had an opportunity to examine the arguments of the Report at leisure. He said it reminded him of a cause that was argued aptly and eloquently in a court of Georgia; and when the counsel had finished their arguments the Judge thereupon instantly pulled his opinion out of his pocket and delivered it. Mr. Tyler replied that the gentleman from Georgia need not have made so long a journey for an authority; the Committee found one in Mr. Taney's reasons for removing the Deposites as soon as he came into office. Mr. Forsyth replied, that if the committee took that authority for a precedent they should at least approve of it. He remarked in the outset, that the question now before the Senate was one between the Bank and the Executive; one portion of the Senate supported the Bank, the other the government.

Mr. Webster took exception to this as a reflection upon his patriotism; and after making a very passionate, menatory and personal reply, concluded as he began with saying that it was not a question between the Bank and the Executive; and he did not stand by the Bank, but the country; and he would have the gentleman from Georgia to understand, that he should not place him in that position, and he would not suffer himself to be placed, but where he choose to be placed, &c. &c. The tone and manner shew an uncommon degree of tempestuous feeling; an extraordinary "pressure." I was sorry for the honor of New England to see its distinguished Senator so "distressed." Nobdy would have dreamt he had been wounded, if he had not fluttered; for the allusion was equally applicable to all.

The Senator from Georgia, according to his constant wont, leaned back in his chair, protruded his feet, clasped his hands, resting them in his lap, and looked up to the sky-light smiling, during the whole of Mr. Webster's remarks. He rose leisurely to reply; and, in his usual courteous manner and melodious voice, without the slightest indication of lost or ruffled temper, informed the Senator from Massachusetts, he should always place him aside of the Bank, whenever he thought proper, whether he would or no. And in a few words demonstrated, that this had been nothing but a contest between the Bank and the government, and the gentleman had been the champion of this common enemy. In reply to some allusion made by Mr. W. to Mr. Forsyth's "Georgian Judge," and that Mr. F. was "out of his seat yesterday," Mr. F. said he did not allow gentlemen to question his absence; but if the Senator chose to take the stand and undergo an examination, he was ready to do the same; and as willing to account for his "whereabouts," as he would be. Mr. W. disclaimed the application of the allusion. Mr. F. understood him to mean, that he was at the "White House." Mr. W. had made an allusion about loosing temper, or betraying feeling; which Mr. F. turned upon him very adroitly. Mr. F. never loses his temper, nor is ever betrayed into passion. He, as well as Mr. Wright and Mr. Grundy, are all Van Buren men in this particular.

I have not witnessed so much sparing in the Senate in one day during the Session. Mr. Clay made something of a speech, in his usual vein of spleen and envy. I am sorry to see this man so degrade himself, if any thing can degrade him, after reviling Mr. Adams till obloquy and vituperation were exhausted, and then taking an office under him.

The most amusing incident of the whole day was to see Col. Crockett strut leisurely across the area of the Senate in the very whirlwind of debate, with his shirt collar expanded like a peacock's tail, and with a self-complacent grin that seemed to say to the ignorant audience, "guess who I am?"

REIS EFFENDI.

The miserable falsehood that the President treated the New York delegates disrepectfully, has been exposed as soon as invented. The following is copied from the Evening Post:

"The delegates who went to Washington with the Merchants' and Traders' Memorial (as it is called) met with a highly courteous reception from the President of the United States; but were given distinctly to understand that the mind of the Executive was fully made up to sign no bill re-chartering the United States Bank under any circumstances. At least thus says the Journal of Commerce, 'on authority' and the President is further represented to have said that 'he regretted very much the pecuniary embarrassments under which the merchants of New York were suffering, but that the National Government had not produced the distress, and had no power to relieve it.' He said that the United States Bank would continue to the end of its present charter without molestation in any way by the Government. 'That he believed the State Banks would prove adequate to all the exigencies of the government, and that the experiment which had been resolved upon would prove successful. If, however, the two years to elapse before the termination of the charter of the United States Bank should indicate differently, it would then be proper to consider some new plan for transacting the fiscal concerns of the Government.'

The New York Evening Post says, of the Bank Meeting in that city on Saturday:

"The Park meeting to have been held to day was a humdrum affair. A mob assembled, but all the proceedings which took place consisted of a general battle royal, which is still going on at the present writing, one o'clock. It is all their own affair, and let the Nationals and Bank men settle it among themselves."

I am, Sir, with respect, yours truly,

King Biddle, not satisfied with the embarrassment he has produced among business men, has extended his cramping irons to the poor pensioners, and refuses to pay to them the money government has placed in his hands for their benefit, or deliver it up. How much farther he will attempt to oppress the community it is impossible to predict—the Bank papers still threaten "that the times MUST be worse before they are BETTER." Hence the exercise of all the means of the Bank to produce actual embarrassment and distress. Hence also the artificial attempts to excite alarm and panic where real distress cannot be brought about.

If the administration should be overcome by the Bank, (says a letter in the Washington Globe) the effects would be as disastrous as the victory of the East India Company over Mr. Fox. They prostrated liberal principles in England for almost half a century, caused the long war between France and England, goaded on the excesses of the French revolution, and finally caused the success of the Holy Alliance.

A great Story—for effect.—The Boston Atlas says that since the removal of the Deposits, there have been forty-five failures in this city—will it be so kind as to name the persons? We know of but seventeen.

Mr. Avery.—Under the title of "A Vindication of the Result of the Trial of Rev. E. K. Avery, to which is affixed his statement of facts relative to the circumstances by which he became involved in the prosecution," a pamphlet has been issued by Mr. David H. Elia, of this city. This work has been looked for with some interest, especially since the recent attempt to palm off a spurious pamphlet upon the subject. A large portion of it is devoted to a review of the articles written by "Aristides," which were published shortly after the trial, in a Providence paper, and extensively re-published throughout the country.

As, however, we did not publish any of the numbers of "Aristides," we do not consider it necessary to take any further notice of the Vindication, than to announce its publication, and vouch for its authenticity.

Mahomet's Dying Speech betrayed any thing but the cruel disposition he has been accused of possessing. On the evening before his death, he addressed the audience in the Mosque, as follows:—"Moslems, I am dying. None need longer fear me—if I have struck any one of you—let him come hither and return the blows upon my back. If I have robbed any of his property, let him repay him self from this purse. If I have insulted any man, let him in his turn insult me. I submit myself to you—do justice upon me."

Thickness, in his travels, published in 1772, states that it was customary among the beau monde of Paris, to provide for the dessert of a female friend, an artificial fruit, which, at a certain signal, burst forth into fire works, displaying her name; and that on the birth-day of any distinguished individuals, the visitors fastened fire-works of a similar nature to the rear of their carriages.

We accidentally omitted to state yesterday, that both Houses of Congress adjourned over to Monday.

For the Boston Morning Post.

"Man's inhumanity to man,
Makes countless thousands mourn."

I have read with deep interest the articles published in the Post, relative to Imprisonment for Debt, and wish to add my humble tribute in behalf of those on whom the rigor of this vestige of barbarism has operated, and still continues to operate, when circumstances shall put the poor debtor, into the power of such as will make the most of every thing.

We are told by some, that there is no distress, consequent upon the above named law—excepting where causes would operate equally severe against the same subject, if there were no such law. In reply I would tell such a man that he had not seen as much of the effects he speaks of, as I have—and that should the poor man cease to obtain credit, for such things as he did not absolutely need, the evils that now exist would soon be lessened—for as the case is at present, traders trust to the law for pay, that if there was no coercive measure by which collections could be made, there would be fewer small debts—but while a man can sell his hundreds of dollars worth of goods at a good profit, and in such amounts as that he expects to obtain these debts, even should the parties be poor, by the aid of the shut up law,—where is the evil to stop? abolish imprisonment for debt—mark taint at least as well as you do your horses, or dogs—aye, why is it, that so much sympathy is manifested here among our warmest professing christians towards the colored slave?—while we are depriving our white brother of the sweet air of heaven, and suffering those whom misfortune has overtaken, to pine away and die—even deprived of the kind offices of a tender wife, or affectionate but poor children. Ye guardians of the public health, look to these things; ye men who have been called together to legislate for all, be sure before you depart from this good city, do the people this great blessing—obliterate the foul blot on our fair Constitution—then will posterity long remember with gratitude, the year 1834.

HOWARD.

To the Editor of the Boston Morning Post:

Sir.—The Editor of the Transcript thought it necessary to give publicity to the fact, that the Organist of St. Paul's Church was not in attendance at the Lecture of Mr. Winslow, on Sunday evening last, and states that on "this account there was no music." He says "more than 500 persons were compelled to return from the church without having gained admission, amongst these was the Organist." I would advise him to obtain for the future, correct information before he attempts to publish. The Organist, an hour after the close of Divine Service in the afternoon, was not within two miles of the Church for the remainder of the evening. I would likewise inform him that had the Organist been there, it would have been, with regard to music, the same thing, for there was no choir—he did not mention that—probably deeming it of no importance, or intending in such case to volunteer his vocal talents on such an occasion.

However, if the Editor of the Transcript feels any particular desire to know why the Organist was not there, or any one interested, and will call me on, I will render satisfactory answers to all inquiries.

I am, Sir, with respect, yours truly,
THE ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S.

POLICE COURT.

[Monday]

Family Affection.—Jane Joyce vs. Richard Babbington, for an assault. The Court understood that a disinterested eye-witness was present and called him to the stand. The worthy witness seemed to have taken the following catch from an old song for his motto:—

"And while you are there don't forget
The skein of white worsted at Flim's."

Witness.—You must know, your honor, that she's his own and only sister—well, then, she went into the room where her brother and mother was, and her countenance was vicious—oh it was very vicious, yer honor,—you never saw the like of its expression. Well, now, her mother's fut had been scald, or perhaps ye would say burned, if ye saw it—so that she was in bed; well, ye must not forget her looks were vicious still, and she said to her mother—you will remember her scald tut—"why didn't you bring me the muslin?"

Now by reason of her fut—the bad hap of which I believe I mentioned til yer honor once before—the mother couldn't walk a step—and by that token, could not fetch the muslin, but told her where to find it. Well, this woman, Mrs. Joyce, or more plainly speaking, as I may say, that sister gets up to go for the muslin; but that man, Mr. Babbington, who is very civil, would not get up to let her pass to get at the muslin—I suppose he was vexed to think that she cared more about the muslin than her mother—for she never asked her mother how her sore fut was, that was scald, and which I ought to have mentioned before.

Court.—You have reached the point about the sore foot half a dozen times. See if you can't progress a step further in this mystery.

Witness.—Well he wouldn't get up, and so she hove a binch at him. He thin jumps up quick, and pushes her into the passage; but she returned and threw a lap-board at his head, and that was the end of it.

Court.—Well the last three or four words are to the purpose. Let the defendant be discharged, and as for you, my good lady, don't you come into court again with such a story, but go about your business, and get a quiet and honest living.

[Tuesday.]

Pride of character.—George Bradford—(a gentleman of a pale brown color)—was arraigned for an assault on Mary Doane, a little deeper dyed in the wool, than himself. After the sister of Mrs. Doane had given her version of the horrible attack on her sister, by which the bridge of her broad nose was broken, Bradford was requested to give his account of the affair.

Bradford.—I and two other colored gentlemen were standing in a store, a laughing within ourselves, when the two ladies came in, and said we were black-guarding on 'em.

Mary called us a set of darkies—I told her as how we warnt any of her class. She then said, "Who cares for you, old George Bradford." Now no gentleman what thinks any thing of himself, could stand such sayings as that, yer honor. So you see I jest pushed her out of the door, and threw her into the snow.

Bradford then introduced a witness—a genuine ace of clubs—an "entire" nigger—the darkest of the dark.

"His face was black, his brow was black,
All, all was black, except his grinning teeth."

but he was unable to shed any light upon the dark affair. "All he knew was, that the two ladies came into the store, and that the fat, short, thick, bluff faced one, was sarsy to the gentleman, who flung her down against the hogshead, and that her sister came up, and said to the gentleman—Don't mind what she says, for she's drunk."

The Court seemed to think, that the simple calling of a circle of colored people, even if they were "gentlemen," a "set of darkies," was no justification for the assault, and fined the gentleman $200 and costs—$5 41. Bradford thought it was a "leettle too hard to be called such a thing as that, and have to pay too;" and claimed an appeal to higher tribunal, where his honor and color, would be more fully vindicated; but after a consultation with his sable senate, in court, and counting the costs of prosecuting the appeal, he withdrew his motion.

Note.—In the report of Conway's case, in Monday's Post, it is stated that Mr. Gould left his house in Conway's charge; but that was not the fact; Mr. G. left the house in charge of some members of his own family.

Sentences at the Municipal Court, Feb. 7, Term 1834.—John Shaw, stealing articles of the value of $110 the property of Stanton, Nichols and Whitney, in their Warehouse, sentence 5 days solitary confinement and 3 years House of Correction. William Butler, felonious assault with intent to kill, jury could not agree. James H. Foster, stealing various articles of the value of $98, the property of William H. Milton, sentence fine of $40. Hannah Lawrence, having in possession a ten dollar counterfeit bill on the U. S. Bank with intent to pass the same, sentence one day solitary confinement, two years House of Correction. Silas Holden and wife for keeping a house of ill fame—fine $100. Mathew Lafield, stealing from Thomas Parsons' dwelling house, sentence 1 day solitary confinement 1 year and 3 months in the house of correction. Robert Porter, stealing a pair of boots the property of John R. Bigelow, sentence 1 day solitary and 9 months in the House of Correction. John Smith, stealing a watch the value of $12, sentence 1 day solitary, and two years hard labor in the State Prison. James Burke, assaulting a lady in the evening, sentence 5 days solitary, and 3 months in the House of Correction. John Kenny, assaulting Michael Johnson, sentence 1 day solitary, 1 year state prison.

MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE.

Tuesday, Feb. 11.—In the Senate, Report on the subject of Bank contracts with Treasury of the United States, accepted and sent down. Orders of the day were taken up, and bill in addition to an act to secure the right of suffrage, was amended and passed to be engrossed. [This act provides that at any Town Meeting, when votes are required to be given by ballot, at the request of three or more legal voters, the person presiding shall have before him a correct list of the qualified voters, and with the assistance of the clerk shall check the name of every person who gives in his ballot.] Bill to establish Police Court in New Bedford, was passed over. Petition of proprietors of the Middlesex canal, for law to prevent frauds in collection of tolls on said canal, committed; order of notice on petition of Benjamin Parker and others.

In the House, several petitions on Masonry were referred. Committee reported on the expenditure and ways and means of the Commonwealth, and a resolve authorising the Treasurer to borrow money; ordered to a second reading, and to be printed. Committee appointed to examine Jails and Houses of Correction in the Commonwealth, reported thereon a bill for the regulation of Jails and Houses of Correction, which was read, laid on table, and ordered to be printed. Bill concerning election of Representatives to Congress by a plurality, was rejected by a vote of 238 to 216. Passed to be engrossed, bill to incorporate the Danyville Manufacturing Company—to change the name of Troy to Fall River—concerning special powers on the County Commissioners of Hampshire county, and bill to incorporate proprietors of the Norfolk Laboratory.
